Henderson
January 12, 2013

An 18 year old freshman at Emory & Henry College from Richmond, Virginia experienced a strange accident when he was six. Parker Eads broke his leg sliding across a wet kitchen floor and was rushed to the hospital where he was put in a full body cast with limited use of his arms.

An avid sports fan, Eads played four seasons of high school basketball at Richmond Christian School. Eads combined his love of Ohio State football and poetry to major in Mass Communications and pursue a career as a sports writer.

Currently Eads writes for the sports section of “The Whitetopper,” and believes his honest and loyal personality will help him achieve his career goals.
